History of Hong Kong

Hong Kong suffered a grievous loss when the Governor, Sir Edward Youde, GCMG, GCVO, MBE, died on December 5, 1986 in the course of a visit to Peking. He was the first Governor to have died in office.

From the day he assumed the governorship in May 1982, Sir Edward had worked unceasingly for Hong Kong, steering it through a crucial period in its history. He was personally involved in the negotiations which led to the Joint Declaration of the British and Chinese governments on the future of this territory.

The high esteem in which he was held was evident from the unprecedented and spontaneous display of public grief by the people from all sectors of the community, both during and after the lying-in-state and state funeral.

Sir Edward was 62 years of age at the time of his death.

His appointment as Governor of Hong Kong followed upon a most distinguished Foreign Service career, which included an ambassadorship to China.

Following the successful conclusion of the Sino-British negotiations, to which he had devoted so much of his time, Sir Edward was able to concentrate more fully on internal administration.

But he was also concerned to promote wider international understanding of Hong Kong and its dependence upon free access to global markets in order to survive.

His untimely death in Peking occurred in the course of a mission to China to promote Hong Kong trade. Three other such missions during the year took him to Japan, North America and Britain.

These promotions accompanied a marked upturn in trade, industry and business activity in general, which set the pace for a more optimistic outlook to replace the political uncertainty that had earlier weighed upon many aspects of life in the territory.

This trend was also reflected in major development projects to improve the infrastructure of Hong Kong, including expansion of new towns, construction of more hospitals and housing estates, a light rail transit system, and a second underground harbour crossing, which will be one of the largest projects of its kind in the world.

All of these developments gave fresh emphasis to Hong Kong's continued commitment to the future.

Following the signature on December 19, 1984 of the Joint Declaration of the British and Chinese Governments on the future of Hong Kong, the British Parliament passed the Hong Kong Act 1985 which made provision for and in connection with the ending of British sovereignty and jurisdiction over Hong Kong as from July 1, 1997. The Act received the Royal Assent on April 4, 1985.

A few days later the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China decided to ratify the Joint Declaration.

The Joint Declaration entered into force on May 27, 1985 when instruments of ratification were exchanged in Peking between the two governments. It was registered at the United Nations by the two governments simultaneously on June 12.

Briefly, the Joint Declaration and its Annexes provide that Hong Kong will, with effect from July 1, 1997, become a Special Administrative Region of the People's Republic of China. The Special Administrative Region will have its own government and legislature composed of local inhabitants, and will enjoy a high degree of autonomy, except in foreign and defence affairs which are the responsibilities of the Central People's Government. Hong Kong's social and economic systems, as well as its lifestyle, will remain unchanged for 50 years after the establishment of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, and China's socialist system and socialist policies will not be practised in it.

Following the entry into force of the Joint Declaration, immediate steps were taken to begin implementation of its provisions. Chief among these steps was the formation of the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group (JLG), whose functions are to conduct consultations on the implementation of the Joint Declaration; to discuss matters relating to the smooth transfer of government in 1997; and to exchange information and conduct consultations on such subjects as may be agreed by the two sides.

A Place from Which to Trade

Hong Kong's history has been one of material and social improvement: the expansion of city and towns by cutting into hillsides, reclaiming the land from the sea, and the building of homes, schools, hospitals and other forms of public facilities to meet the demands of the growing population.

Yet, in its early days, the territory was regarded as an uninviting prospect for settlement. The population of about 3,650 was scattered over 20 villages and hamlets and 2,000 fishermen lived on board their boats in the harbour. Deficient in fertile land and water, and mountainous, Hong Kong possessed only one natural asset: a fine and sheltered anchorage. Largely the reason for the British presence that began in the 1840s, Victoria Harbour was strategically located on the trade routes of the Far East, and was soon to become the hub of a burgeoning entrepôt trade with China.

Hong Kong's development into a commercial centre began with its founding as a settlement under the British flag in 1841. At the end of the 18th century the British dominated the foreign trade at Canton but found conditions unsatisfactory, mainly because of the conflicting viewpoints of two quite dissimilar civilisations.

The Chinese regarded themselves as the only civilised people and foreigners trading at Canton were subject to residential and other restrictions. Confined to the factory area, they were allowed to remain only for the trading season, during which they had to leave their families at Macau. They were forbidden to enter the city and to learn the Chinese language. Shipping dues were arbitrarily varied and generally much bickering resulted between the British and Chinese traders. Yet there was mutual trust and the spoken word alone was sufficient for even the largest transactions.

Trade had been in China's favour and silver flowed in until the growth of the opium trade — from 1800 onwards — reversed this trend. The outflow of silver became more marked from 1834, after the East India Company lost its monopoly of the China trade, and the foreign free traders, hoping to get rich quickly, joined the lucrative opium trade which the Chinese had made illegal in 1799. This led to the appointment of Lin Ze-xu (Lin Tse-hsu) in March 1839, as special Commissioner in Canton with orders to stamp out the opium trade. A week later he surrounded the foreign factories with troops, stopped food supplies and refused to allow anyone to leave until all stocks of opium had been surrendered and dealers and ships' masters had signed a bond not to import opium on pain of execution. Captain Charles Elliot, RN, the British Government's representative as Superintendent of Trade, was shut up with the rest and authorised the surrender of 20,283 chests of opium after a siege of six weeks.

Elliot would not allow normal trade to resume until he had reported fully to the British Government and received instructions. The British community retired to Macau and, when warned by the Portuguese Governor that he could not be responsible for their safety, took refuge on board ships in Hong Kong harbour in the summer of 1839.

Lord Palmerston, the Foreign Secretary, decided that the time had come for a settlement of Sino-British commercial relations. Arguing that in surrendering the opium the British in Canton had been forced to ransom their lives — though, in fact, their lives had never been in danger — he demanded either a commercial treaty that would put trade relations on a satisfactory footing, or the cession of a small island where the British could live free from threats under their own flag.

An expeditionary force arrived in June 1840 to back these demands and thus began the so-called First Opium War (1840-2). Hostilities alternated with negotiations until agreement was reached between Elliot and Qishan (Keshen), the Manchu Commissioner. Lin had been replaced by Qishan after his exile in disgrace over the preliminaries of a treaty.

Under the Convention of Chuanbi (Chuenpi), January 20, 1841, Hong Kong Island was ceded to Britain. A naval landing party hoisted the British flag at Possession Point on January 26, 1841, and the island was formally occupied. In June, Elliot began to sell plots of land and settlement began.

Neither side accepted the Chuanbi terms. The cession of a part of China aroused shame and anger among the Chinese, and the unfortunate Qishan was ordered to Peking in chains. Palmerston was equally dissatisfied with Hong Kong, which he contemptuously described as 'a barren island with hardly a house upon it,' and refused to accept it as the island station that had been demanded as an alternative to a commercial treaty.

'You have treated my instructions as if they were waste paper,' Palmerston told Elliot in a magisterial rebuke, and replaced him. Elliot's successor, Sir Henry Pottinger, arrived in August 1841 and conducted hostilities with determination. A year later, after pushing up the Chang Jiang (Yangtze River) and threatening to assault Nanjing (Nanking), he brought the hostilities to an end by the Treaty of Nanjing, signed on August 29, 1842.

In the meantime, the Whig Government in England had fallen and, in 1841, the new Tory Foreign Secretary, Lord Aberdeen, issued revised instructions to Pottinger, dropping the demand for an island.

Pottinger, who had returned to Hong Kong during the winter lull in the campaign, was pleased with the progress of the new settlement and, in the Treaty of Nanjing, deviated from his instructions by successfully demanding both a treaty and an island, thus securing Hong Kong. In addition, five Chinese ports, including Canton, were opened for trade. The commercial treaty was embodied in the supplementary Treaty of Humen (Bogue), October 1843, by which the Chinese were allowed free access to Hong Kong Island for trading purposes.

Lease of New Territories

The Second Anglo-Chinese War (1856-8) arose out of disputes over the interpretation of the earlier treaties and over the boarding of a British lorch, the Arrow, by Chinese in search of suspected pirates. The Treaty of Tianjin (Tientsin), 1858, which ended the war, gave the British the privilege of diplomatic representation in China. The first British envoy, Sir Frederick Bruce, who had been the first Colonial Secretary in Hong Kong, was fired on at Dagu (Taku) Bar on his way to Peking to present his credentials, and hostilities were renewed from 1859-60.

The troops serving on this second expedition camped on Kowloon peninsula, as the territory's earliest photographs show. Finding it healthy, they wished to retain it as a military cantonment, with the result that Sir Harry Parkes, Consul at Canton, secured from the Viceroy the perpetual lease of the peninsula as far as Boundary Street, including Stonecutters Island. The Convention of Peking, 1860, which ended the hostilities, provided for its outright cession.

Other European countries and Japan subsequently demanded concessions from China, particularly after Germany, France and Russia rescued China from the worst consequences of its defeat by Japan in 1895. In the ensuing tension, Britain felt that efficient defence of Hong Kong harbour demanded control of the land around it.

By a convention signed in Peking on June 9, 1898, respecting an extension of Hong Kong territory, the New Territories — comprising the area north of Kowloon up to the Shenzhen River, and 235 islands — was leased for 99 years. The move was directed against France and Russia, not against China whose warships were allowed to use the wharf at Kowloon City. There, Chinese authority was permitted to continue 'except insofar as may be inconsistent with the military requirements for the defence of Hong Kong.' However, an Order in Council of December 27, 1899 revoked this clause and the British unilaterally took over Kowloon City. There was some desultory opposition when the British took over the New Territories in April 1899, but this soon disappeared. The area was declared to be part of the overall territory of Hong Kong but was administered separately from the urban area.

Initial Growth

The new settlement did not go well at first. It attracted unruly elements, while fever and typhoons threatened life and property. Crime was rife. The Chinese influx was unexpected because it was not anticipated they would choose to live under a foreign flag. The population rose from 32,983 (31,463 Chinese) in 1851 to 878,947 (859,425 Chinese) in 1931.

The Chinese asked only to be left alone and thrived under a liberal British rule. Hong Kong became a centre of Chinese emigration and trade with Chinese communities abroad. Ocean-going shipping using the port increased from 2,889 ships in 1860 to 23,881 in 1939. The dominance of the China trade forced Hong Kong to conform to Chinese usage and to adopt the silver dollar as the currency unit in 1862. In 1935, when China went off silver, Hong Kong had to follow suit with an equivalent 'managed' dollar.

Hong Kong's administration followed the normal pattern for a British territory overseas, with a governor nominated by Whitehall and nominated Executive and Legislative Councils with official majorities. The first non-government members of the Legislative Council were nominated in 1850, and the first Chinese in 1880; the first non-government members of the Executive Council appeared in 1896, and the first Chinese in 1926. In 1972, the long-standing arrangement that two electoral bodies — the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce and the Unofficial Justices of the Peace — were each allowed to nominate a member to the Legislative Council, was discontinued.

The British residents pressed strongly for self-government on a number of occasions, but the home government consistently refused to allow the Chinese majority to be subject to the control of a small European minority.

A Sanitary Board was set up in 1883, became partly elected in 1887, and developed into an Urban Council in 1936. The intention, at first, was to govern the Chinese through Chinese magistrates seconded from the mainland. But this system of two parallel administrations was only half-heartedly applied and broke down mainly because of the weight of crime. It was completely abandoned in 1865 in favour of the principle of equality of all races before the law. In that year, the Governor's instructions were significantly amended to forbid him to assent to any ordinance 'whereby persons of African or Asiatic birth may be subjected to any disabilities or restrictions to which persons of European birth or descent are not also subjected.' Government policy was laissez-faire, treating Hong Kong as a market place where all were free to come and go and where the government held the scales impartially.

Public and utility services developed — the Hong Kong and China Gas Company in 1861, the Peak Tram in 1885, the Hongkong Electric Company in 1889, China Light and Power in 1903, the electric Tramways in 1904 and the then government-owned Kowloon-Canton Railway, completed in 1910. There were successive reclamations dating from 1851 — notably one completed in 1904 in Central District, which produced Chater Road, Connaught Road and Des Voeux Road, and another in Wan Chai between 1921 and 1929.

A system of public education began in 1847 with grants to the Chinese vernacular schools. Later, the voluntary schools—mainly run by missionaries—were included in a grant scheme in 1873. The College of Medicine for the Chinese, founded in 1887, developed into the University of Hong Kong in 1911 and offered arts, engineering and medical faculties.

After the Chinese Revolution of 1911, which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, there was a long period of unrest in China and large numbers of people found shelter in Hong Kong. The agitation continued after Chinese participation in World War I brought in its wake strong nationalist and anti-foreign sentiment—inspired both by disappointment over failure at the Versailles peace conference to regain the German concessions in Shandong (Shantung), and by the post-war radicalism of the Kuomintang. The Chinese sought to abolish all foreign treaty privileges in China. Foreign goods were boycotted and the unrest spread to Hong Kong, where a seamen's strike in 1922 was followed by a serious general strike in 1925-6 under pressure from Canton. This petered out, though not before causing considerable disruption in Hong Kong. Britain, with the largest foreign stake in China, was at that time a main target of anti-foreign sentiment, but in this odious role it was soon to be replaced by Japan.

The 1930s and World War II

During World War I, Japan presented its '21 demands' to China. Then, in 1931, Japan occupied Manchuria and the attempt to detach China's northern provinces led to open war in 1937. Canton fell to the Japanese in 1938, resulting in a mass flight of refugees to Hong Kong. It was estimated that some 100,000 refugees entered in 1937, 500,000 in 1938 and 150,000 in 1939—bringing the population at the outbreak of World War II to an estimated 1.6 million. It was thought that at the height of the influx about half a million people were sleeping in the streets.

Japan entered World War II when, on December 7, 1941, its aircraft bombed United States warships at Pearl Harbour and at approximately the same time Japanese armed forces attacked Hong Kong (December 8, 1941, local time). The Japanese invaded Hong Kong from across the mainland border and, subsequently, the British were forced to withdraw from the New Territories and Kowloon on to Hong Kong Island. After a week of stubborn resistance on the island, the defenders—including the local Volunteer Corps—were overwhelmed and Hong Kong surrendered on Christmas Day. The Japanese occupation lasted three years and eight months.

Trade virtually disappeared; currency lost its value; the supply of food was disrupted and government services and public utilities were seriously impaired. Many residents moved to Macau—the Portuguese province hospitably opening its doors to them. Towards the latter part of the occupation, the Japanese sought to ease the food problems by organising mass deportations. In the face of increasing oppression, the bulk of the community remained loyal to the allied cause. Chinese guerillas operated in the New Territories and escaping allied personnel were assisted by the rural population.

Soon after news of the Japanese surrender was received on August 14, 1945, a provisional government was set up by the Colonial Secretary, Mr. (later Sir) Frank Gimson. Rear Admiral Sir Cecil Harcourt arrived on August 30 with units of the British Pacific Fleet to establish a temporary military government. Civil government was formally restored on May 1, 1946, when Sir Mark Young resumed his interrupted governorship.

The Post-War Years

Following the Japanese surrender, Chinese civilians — many of whom had moved into China during the war — returned at the rate of almost 100,000 a month. The population, which by August 1945 had been reduced to about 600,000, rose by the end of 1947 to an estimated 1.8 million. Then, in the period 1948-9, as the forces of the Chinese Nationalist Government began to face defeat in civil war at the hands of the communists, Hong Kong received an influx unparalleled in its history.

Hundreds of thousands of people — mainly from Guangdong Province, Shanghai and other commercial centres — entered the territory during 1949 and the spring of 1950. By mid-1950, the population was estimated to be 2.2 million. Since then it has continued to rise and now totals more than 5.58 million.

After a period of economic stagnation caused by the United Nations' embargo on trade with China, Hong Kong began to industrialise. No longer could the territory rely solely on its port to provide prosperity for its greatly increased population. From the start, the industrial revolution was based on cotton textiles, gradually adding woollens and, in the late 1960s, man-made fibres and made-up garments. Although the share of total exports held by textiles and clothing has declined over the past 10 years, these still make up around 40 per cent of domestic exports by value. While textiles remain the mainstay of Hong Kong's economy, major contributions are made by electronic products, watches and clocks, plastic goods and other light industries.

Associated with events in China, 1966 saw mounting tension in Hong Kong which during 1967 developed into a series of civil disturbances affecting all aspects of life and temporarily paralysing the economy. But, by year-end, the disturbances were contained and the community continued its traditions of peaceful progress.

In development of the post-war years, Hong Kong has continued to build up its role as an entrepôt with its neighbours and trade with China has been no exception. Coupled with tourism, this has led to vast improvements in communications with an increasing number of people entering China from or through Hong Kong, its natural gateway, each year. The territory's major carrier, Cathay Pacific, and the Civil Aviation Administration of China operate scheduled and a considerable number of charter services between Hong Kong and cities in China, and a new airline, Hong Kong Dragon Airlines, now operates charter services to a number of cities in China. The Kowloon-Canton Railway runs jointly with Canton's railway administration express 'through' trains between Kowloon and Canton; several direct bus services, including a British-Chinese joint venture, operate different routes into Guangdong and other parts of southern China; and there are several daily ferry services to Canton and other ports in South China. Hoverferries operate on some of these services.

To keep pace with the development and a policy of decentralisation, the government is committed to improving the infrastructure and an estimated $6,625 million, about 17 per cent of expenditure, is being spent on public works projects during 1986-7. New roads, tunnels and flyovers have completely transformed road travel throughout the territory in the post-war era and modern, multi-lane highways are opening up many new areas.

The development of Hong Kong's economic base has enabled the government to increase spending on social services over the years — from $3,059 million in 1976-7 to an estimated $21,953 million in 1986-7.

Accommodation has always been a problem with a rapidly growing population and expenditure in this field has increased accordingly. More than 2.5 million people now live in some form of public housing provided by the Housing Authority. Throughout 1986, public housing flats were being constructed at an average rate of almost 100 flats a day, and it is planned to continue providing about 40,000 flats a year under present conditions.

Expenditure on education facilities and improvements for Hong Kong's young and vibrant population has always been one of the major considerations in budget preparations and there are now primary and junior secondary school places for every student up to the age of 15.

In the field of social welfare, major advances have been made by both the government and voluntary agencies in the past decade with expenditure increasing from $348 million in 1976-7 to an estimated $2,487 million during 1986-7.

The medical and health services are also undergoing vigorous development programmes which, by the end of the decade, will provide four more hospitals and some 18 additional clinics and polyclinics.

During the post-war years, a comprehensive system of protection for wages, rest days, statutory holidays, paid annual leave, maternity leave, sick pay, severance payment, end-of-year payment and long-service payment has been built up, and the benefits provided have steadily improved. The minimum age for employment in both the industrial and non-industrial sectors is 15 years.

Public Records Office

Set up in 1972, the Public Records Office is now one of the largest local sources of information for historical and other studies relating to Hong Kong. The office currently manages 10,000 linear metres of official records, approximately 2,000 photographs and an extensive collection of maps, local newspapers and official publications.

The Public Records Office provides a records management service to government departments and makes material available for reference and research to both local and overseas scholars, journalists, students, members of the public and staff of other government departments.

Records which are to be retained permanently are held at the head office in Central District and at one of the two sub-offices at Wong Chuk Hang Road, Aberdeen. Semi-active records, many of which will eventually be destroyed, are stored in the second sub-office.

The increasing awareness of Hong Kong internationally has resulted in a growth over the past year in the number of reference enquiries received by the Public Records Office, and in the number of individuals conducting research on source materials held. In addition to the publication of several books based on these materials, records have been used in the production of television documentaries, films, exhibitions and articles for various newspapers and periodicals.

The Public Records Office came to an agreement in 1986 with the Hong Kong University Library to microfilm its holdings of local Chinese-language newspapers and, in the years to come, substantial additions to the library collection of the office are expected.

Owing to extensive loss and destruction of official records during the Japanese occupation, the bulk of the office's holdings dates from the resumption of British administration in 1945. The loss occasioned by the war has, however, been redeemed to some extent by the acquisition of microfilm copies of certain pre-war British government records relating to Hong Kong. The most significant of these comprises despatches exchanged by the Governors of Hong Kong with London from 1842 to the end of 1952.

The Document Repair Section continued its restoration work and numerous maps and early documents relating to Hong Kong, which could not be handled due to their fragile state, have now been made available for public inspection.

The Microfilm Section continued to film records selected for retention and storage in microfilm form.

Public access to the library, including the newspaper, map and photograph collections, is unrestricted, but formal approval is required for access to official records. Photocopying, microfilming and reading room facilities are available.

Archaeological Background

Archaeological studies in Hong Kong, which began in the 1920s, have uncovered ancient artefacts and other evidence of human activity at numerous sites along the winding shoreline, testifying to events which span more than 6,000 years. The interpretation of these events is still a matter of controversy. Archaeologically, Hong Kong is but a tiny part of the far greater cultural sphere of South China, itself as yet imperfectly known. In such a context, scholarly debate over definitive interpretations may be expected to continue for many years to come.

Recent excavations have revealed two main neolithic cultures lying in stratified sequence. At the lower, oldest levels there is coarse, cord-marked pottery together with a fine, soft fragile pottery decorated with incised lines, perforations and occasionally painted. Chipped and polished stone tools are also present. Current indications suggest a 4th millennium BC date for this initial phase.

Cord-marked pottery and chipped stone tools continue as long lived traditions into the higher, later levels in which a new ceramic style decorated with a wide range of impressed geometric patterns appears. In this phase, beginning in the mid 3rd millennium BC, polished stone tools show better workmanship and a proliferation of forms, some with steps and shoulders, features probably connected with improvements in hafting techniques. Ornaments, such as rings, some slotted, in a range of sizes were also made, sometimes with exquisite craftsmanship, from quartz and other suitable stones.

The final phase of Hong Kong's prehistory is marked by the appearance of bronze about the middle of the 2nd millennium BC. Bronze artefacts do not seem to have been in common use, but a few fine specimens of weapons, swords, arrowheads and halberds, and tools such as socketed axes and fish hooks have been excavated from Hong Kong sites. There is evidence, too, from the Tung Wan site at Shek Pik, Lantau Island, in the shape of pottery moulds, that the metal was actually worked here.

The pottery of the bronze age comprises a continuation of the earlier cord-impressed and geometric traditions and a new ware, fired at higher temperature leading to vitrification. This so-called hard geometric is decorated with designs of which many are reminiscent of the geometric patterns of the late neolithic, but with their own distinctive style including the well known 'Kui-dragon' or 'double F' pattern, so characteristic of this period.

Archaeology is silent on such questions as the ethnic and linguistic affinities of the ancient peoples whose material remains it studies. However, some light is shed on these matters at the beginnings of recorded history, for ancient Chinese literary records speak of maritime peoples occupying China's southeastern seaboard and known to them as 'Yue'. It is probable, therefore, that some at least of Hong Kong's pre-historic inhabitants belonged to the 'Hundred Yue', as this diverse group of peoples was often called.

Interesting archaeological features, almost certainly made by these people, are the rock carvings, most of which are geometric in style, at Shek Pik, on Kau Sai, Po Tai, Cheung Chau and Tung Lung islands and at Big Wave Bay and Wong Chuk Hang on Hong Kong Island.

The military conquest of South China by the north during the Qin and Han Dynasties must have brought increasing numbers of settlers into the region and exerted a variety of influences on the indigenous populations. These events are witnessed by the discovery in excavations of coins of the Qin (221-207 BC) and Han (206 BC-220 AD), but the most outstanding monument to this turbulent period must undoubtedly be the fine brick-built tomb uncovered at Lei Cheng Uk in 1955 with its fine array of typical Han tomb furniture and thought to date from the early to middle Eastern Han period.

Archaeological remains from later historic periods are at present poorly known. Recent work has thrown a welcome light on one aspect of life in the Hong Kong of the Tang Dynasty (618-907 AD) through a study of the dome-shaped lime kilns which are an almost ubiquitous feature of the territory's beaches. Lime, a valuable commodity useful for caulking and protecting wooden boats against marine organisms, waterproofing containers, dressing the acid soils of argicultural fields, building and many other purposes, clearly played an important role in the economy of the period.

Strong traditions link Hong Kong with the events surrounding the Mongol incursions and the concluding chapters of the Song Dynasty in the 13th century AD. The Sung Wong Toi inscription, now relocated near the entrance to Hong Kong International Airport, the Song inscription in the grounds of the Tin Hau Temple at Joss House Bay, caches of Song coins from Shek Pik and Mai Po and celadons of Song type from various sites, especially Nim Shue Wan, Lantau, date from this epoch.

Recent archaeological studies are beginning to throw fresh light on events in Hong Kong during the Ming (1368-1644) and Qing (1644-1911) dynasties. These include an analysis of considerable quantities of Ming blue and white porcelain collected in recent years from a site at Penny's Bay, Lantau. Preliminary results suggest that this porcelain is very fine quality export ware of the kind which found its way to the courts of Southeast Asia and the West and dates from the first few decades of the 16th century AD. The ongoing excavation of the Qing period fort on Tung Lung Island has already revealed fascinating details of the internal arrangements of the fortification and the everyday utensils of a remote garrison during the final stages of Imperial China.

HONG KONG'S TROPICAL CYCLONE WARNING SIGNALS

- Do not confuse the Tropical Cyclone Signals on the left with the Strong Monsoon Signal. The Strong Monsoon Signal is a black ball and the lights are white, green, white. It is used whenever the winter monsoon (usually from the north or east) or more rarely the summer monsoon (usually from the southwest) is expected to exceed 40 kilometres per hour (km/h) near sea level anywhere in Hong Kong. These winds may sometimes reach 70 km/h or more in very exposed places.

The Stand By Signal is an advisory signal indicating the possibility of destructive winds occurring in Hong Kong. It is important to realise that while the Tropical Cyclone Warning Signals give warnings of winds above a certain threshold, they do not tell you when the winds are expected to start or stop. In some cases, the Stand By Signal is issued because there is a possibility of severe gusts from a tropical cyclone, but the winds may never reach the level required for a tropical cyclone warning. These include causing in low lying areas as a result of a storm surge which may cause the sea level to rise considerably higher than is normal and the destructive effects of very heavy rain which may cause landslides and flooding. The Stand By Signal is also issued when there is a possibility of severe gusts from a tropical cyclone, but the winds may never reach the level required for a tropical cyclone warning. These include causing in low lying areas as a result of a storm surge which may cause the sea level to rise considerably higher than is normal and the destructive effects of very heavy rain which may cause landslides and flooding. The Stand By Signal is also issued when there is a possibility of severe gusts from a tropical cyclone, but the winds may never reach the level required for a tropical cyclone warning. These include causing in low lying areas as a result of a storm surge which may cause the sea level to rise considerably higher than is normal and the destructive effects of very heavy rain which may cause landslides and flooding.

surges. SIMPLY KNOWING WHAT SIGNAL IS DISPLAYED IS NOT ENOUGH. Tropical cyclone warning bulletins are broadcast at two minutes to and half-past every hour when any of the signals No. 8 to No. 10 is displayed. If you do not have a radio or if you miss a broadcast bulletin, information on the signal status or the tropical cyclone may be obtained from the Public Enquiry Service Centre of the City and New Territories Administration Headquarters, Tel. 3-692255. Please do not telephone the Royal Observatory because the telephone lines there must be kept free for the dissemination of warnings and other urgent operational requirements.

Do you know these terms used in broadcast warning bulletins?
Tropical cyclones are classified into these four categories according to the maximum sustained winds within their circulations —

A tropical depression has maximum sustained winds of less than 63 km/h and at this stage the centre is often not very clearly defined and cannot always be fixed precisely.

A tropical storm has maximum sustained winds in the range 63-87 km/h.

A severe tropical storm has maximum sustained winds in the range 88-117 km/h.

A typhoon has maximum sustained winds of 118 km/h or more.

The strongest winds in a tropical cyclone blow in a tight band round the outside edge of the eye in an anticlockwise direction.

The direction from which the wind is blowing, the direction towards which a tropical cyclone is moving and the bearing of its centre from Hong Kong are each given to the nearest point of a 16-point compass bearing. Thus the actual bearing will be within  $11\frac{1}{4}^\circ$  of the reported value. For and moving on any heading between  $25^{\circ}$  and  $28^{\circ}$  is said to be "centred" east of Hong Kong and moving west ..... It will be seen that this statement does not necessarily mean that the centre is heading directly towards Hong Kong as its course could be as much as  $22^{\circ}$  off the direct "collision" course.

TROPICAL CYCLONE PLOTTING MAP

This map is intended for plotting the estimated position of the centre of a tropical cyclone from the latitude and longitude values contained in broadcast warning bulletins so that the general picture of its movement may be envisaged. When plotting the track of the tropical cyclone centre, it is important to note that there can be short-term erratic departures from the general direction of movement.
